CAMP ERIN HOLDS BEREAVEMENT CAMP FOR CHILDREN IN CHICAGO

Camp Is Available To Local Children For The First Time As Part of New York Life Foundation's $600,000 Grant To The Moyer Foundation

Chicago, IL, August 11, 2009 – Camp Erin, one of the largest networks of bereavement camps for children in the nation, held its first camp in Chicago for teens, ages 13 to 17 on June 12th-14th and a second camp for younger children, ages 6-12, was held July 31st – August 2nd. A total of more than 90 children benefitted from these camps. The Moyer Foundation, founded by Major League Baseball's Philadelphia Phillies All-Star pitcher Jamie Moyer and his wife Karen, established Camp Erin in order to provide a safe and fun environment for children to grieve and heal after the loss of a loved one. Weekend-long camps are held in 28 cities across the country throughout the year.

“We are pleased to bring Camp Erin to children and families in the Chicago area for the first time,” said Gary Pollock, Executive Director of The Moyer Foundation. “Fifty campers will participate because of a generous gift from the New York Life Foundation, which, along with other donors, makes it possible for all campers to attend Camp Erin free of charge. Dealing with bereavement is a challenge at any age, but children face unique hurdles and Camp Erin provides the encouraging, supportive environment necessary to help kids heal.”

The $600,000 grant from the New York Life Foundation supports the expansion of Camp Erin nationwide by funding camps in six new markets including Chicago. The other expansion cities are St. Louis, Cleveland, Detroit, Minneapolis and Anchorage. The grant will also support camps that are already in operation in Philadelphia, Seattle, and Albany.

“Helping children grow and learn is a cornerstone of the New York Life Foundation's Nurturing the Children initiative – and Camp Erin accomplishes this goal by providing an environment for children to cope with the loss of a loved one,” said Chris Park, president of the New York Life Foundation. “With local statistics indicating that roughly 29,000 children in the Chicago area have experienced the loss of a loved one, it is a privilege to help as many grieving children as possible by playing a role in the healing process with an organization as effective as Camp Erin.”
